

Objectives and How I executed them

After speaking to my client and assessing their pain points, we were able to discover the core areas they needed my help with. I was able to use my project management skills cross functionally to support their needs.

Objectives	How I executed them
- Make sure client gets places on time - schedule management	- I check their schedule for upcoming appointments, and based on her current location give her 2 text messages: Leave in 5 mins, Leave NOW - I built in buffer time to her schedule so events are less likely to overlap - We set up "wind-down" reminders on her phone nightly to reinforce bedtime routine. - I built a shared Google calendar to track work, gym, social events, hobbies, buffer time, driving time, cooking, life goals, lifestyle, and MBA prep tasks.
- Help reset client's style = Modern Business Casual	- I directed her to start a Pinterest with this style in mind and I took it over to add more inspiration - Monthly donate 5 things that dont match this style - Monthly I create an online shopping cart for her to choose 1 item that matches her new style - Quarterly wardrobe purges - Random style checkpoints where she sends me what she's wearing in public in the moment and we see if it meets the goals she has set for herself, as an accountability check - Created a checklist of staple pieces she will need to encapsulate this style and use it as a guide when shopping/ purging closet
- Guide client to stick to her nutrition plan, and lower budget on food	- Based on her upcoming schedule we picked a concrete date to start eating healthy - Picked 1 thing to cut a month, either a high calorie ingredient or restaurant she frequents - Limited the amount of brunches/dinners she has w/ friends to 4 a month. Tracked this number on Notion and frequently report it to her when filling in her calendar - Created a handy healthy list of recipes on a Notion table to make as alternatives to eating out - Added Grocery Runs to her schedule, so she has food at home and doesn't eat out - Based on the business of calendar added days where she packed work meals - Set a dining-out allowance & track weekly balance. - Organized a "pantry restock day" monthly to eliminate impulsive orders.

- Find fun activities for client to do, (frontload for a week)	- She describes what kind of event she's looking for, on what dates, on what times and I will add it to a Notion Page for the Week - Highlight upcoming seasonal ideas (pumpkin patch) - Created a Notion page of recurring events: museum nights, workout classes, maker workshops, pop-ups, game nights, etc
- Lessen lifestyle creep	- Created and documented all routines, subscriptions to remove redundancies or find a cheaper alternative - Add in "no spend challenge" weeks sporadically - Monitored budget - Spaced out big long term buys
- Managed big long term buys	- I created a Notion Page with big buys, pro/cons, links, price sorted by priority - To reduce impulsive purchases, I created a state ur case form w/ questions like "state how u will actually use it, how it fits into ur life, and if it will improve something in ur life" - I monitored how these big purchases

	affected the budget
- Balance schedule for overall overwhelming	- Put in buffer and decompression time - Prioritized activities that have been known to produce endorphins - Scheduled “quiet mornings” and other calming practices
- Ensure client is making progress towards each goal (tennis, dancing, sewing...) and it is on the schedule - Assess and guarantee client alignment with her master plan that has been attached	- Each goal (color coded) should be addressed in some capacity every month - Schedule it into calendar
- Lessen client’s mental load - Curate recharge options	- Automated to make life easier (laundry pick up, routine appointments...) - Set auto-reminders for nails, hair, brows, skincare refills. So they're always done and appt is always set - I made calls and appointments in lieu of the client - Reduced decision fatigue and standardized decision making process - Anticipated emotional load: prep comfort activities before and after stressful deadlines

This work strengthened my integration, scope, cost, schedule, procurement, and communication management skills that are necessary for project managers to utilize.